Appearance

Originally, Jackson was a fox of a normal features, however, after a mishap in a library he was blessed by the draconic diety Cocytus. This blessing bestowed upon him armorlike draconic scales covering parts of his body and curved draconic horns.

He wears comfortable adventurers clothes and is never seen without a wooden, amber coated amulet bearing the crest of the Falanis clan. He carries a root-like wooden staff adorned with flowers that he can change at will. Atop his head he wears the floral crown of a fallen Archfey.

Always in his company is an owl familiar named Willow. She is an abnormal familiar as he created her by undergoing a ritual he created himself that bonded her to his soul. As a result she shares some of his characteristics such as a small number of scales like his own.

His lifetime exposure and usage of Fey magic combined with his mastery of druidic magic have rendered him ageless.

Personality

Jackson is a kind and optimistic person. He is very intent on helping anyone he can, whether they be person or spirit. He is a pacifistic and idealist at heart though his upbringing by the fey have led him to feel his emotions very strongly and he can be impulsive if he tries to bottle them up. He is fiercely protective of both his loved ones and harm done to them are some of the few things that can provoke him to fury.

The years after his journey with Team Thoril and the final encounter with Icarus have fully reinforced his distaste of violence. Due to agelessness, increasingly fey-like nature, and committed relationship with Arin of the Mogall Woods, he frequently loses track of time. The pilgrimage that his apprentices are sent on serves the unspoken benefit of ensuring he keeps up to date on the going ons outside.

Post Campaign Story

After the slaying of Aarindal, Jackson completed his pilgrimage and found the elemental gate that his clan had sworn to protect. After fortifying the location he began rebuilding the Falanis. With Leif's help he found apprentices and the Falanis is now a diverse group of all species and races, with even some animals and plants having joined after being awoken by Jackson. The Falanis are still a secretive order. The enchantment that protects the grove was weaved over many years by Jackson, other druids, and fey with the weak willed finding themselves having somehow wandered out without knowing it. The location is only known to members of the Sylvan Root with initiates being referred to the order by Leif or other people Jackson trusts. After being notified of them, he steps into their dreams, interviews them, and allows them entry if they are deemed qualified.

He has stayed over all the years in a committed relationship with Arin of Mogall Woods. While Arin is duty bound to stay in Mogall Woods, Jackson will frequently visit by stepping out of a tree. He always tries to surprise Arin with it having become a game. Jackson has also stayed in contact with his former teammates. Occasionally he will politely request entry into their dreams so he can catch up with them.
