

Inity

A humble town on the plate of Kiristym. It is surrounded by tall redwood trees in all directions, except to the west, where the town oversees a cliff leading directly to the sea.

Its residents came from all over the continent of Nabata, which the calamity threw at random; it's an amazing coincidence that many of them were sent to this same place, allowing a community to grow. The people are still very busy with getting the essentials, making sure they will be able to survive in this foreign place; as such, they have not yet contacted the outside world.

A major landmark of this town is the remnants of a building from the old world: one of the colleges (College of Numeromancy) of The Lydian Spires. While battered, the structure is undergoing repair. However bad its condition is, it is still by far the most advanced structure in the town. Surviving scholars and researchers continue living and working in a wing of this college, while some rooms have been repurposed as simple governmental offices.

With how busy the people were to tend for their survival, naming the town was not their primary concern; it was named "Cliffside Point" temporarily. However, now that life has begun to return to some semblance of normalcy, Vee suggested a new name: Inity (EE-nee-tee), to mark a new beginning.
